SCIENCE FICTION READERS

HAVE IMAGINATION

DON'T THEY?

IMAGINE. . .

a page full of witty text extolling the virtues of the sponsors of this convention, plus scintillating cartoons and caricatures of the people responsible. That's what was intended, but the deadline has run out on us again so can you just imagine it? And can we just remind you that is run annually by the

BIRMINGHAM SCIENCE FICTION GROUP which meets on the third Friday of each month at the Ivy Bush, Hagley Road (near Five Ways), Birmingham.
Ring 021-777 1802 or 021-236 1112 for details.

We hope to see you there.

Meanwhile, have a good con.

Or imagine you do.

CHRIS PRIEST: AN INFINITE WRITER

Graham Charnock

The first part of this job is dead easy. Everybody knows how, between us, Chris Priest and I have re-shaped the face of SF in the last decade. There are the five superb and accomplished novels: INDOCTRINAIRE (my first appearance between boards - I contributed one line); FUGUE FOR A DARKENING ISLAND (I tried to persuade Chris the title was too long-winded - he ignored me); INVERTED WORLD (one drunken night we were talking through the idea and I suggested a society based on guilds); THE SPACE MACHINE (his best and most accessible novel to date and one in which, not surprisingly, I had no part); and A DREAM OF WESSEX (THE PERFECT LOVER in USA). And there are a goodly number of pointed and intelligent short stories, some of them collected together in REAL TIME WORLD, and the most recent forming his latest book, AN INFINITE SUMMER.

It's apparent from the body of work to date that Chris is a writer never content to exploit formula writing; each new book is a considerable departure from the last, conceptually and often stylistically, and always his perceptions and the razor-edge of his writing sharpen. If you want the essential Chris Priest, read the title story of his new book. In "An Infinite Summer" the sheer intellectual weight of the idea, the elegiac mood of the writing and the writer's emotional dedication to the piece combine to form as perfect a work of SF as any you're likely to find these days.

The thing is, Chris's work basically comes from a very keen enjoyment of those essential SF images and feelings we all share and know. He's a self-confessed sense-of-wonder junkie on the most basic level, and thankfully for us all, he's an expert on how to transliterate it into his own work.

But you all know what a good writer he is these days; that's why you're honouring him (and not before time) at this convention. What you no doubt want to know (you rascals) is the lowdown on his spotty adolescent days before he entered into a pact with the devil, had his portrait painted and secreted away in a turret to wither and decay while he remained eternally youthful (well, how else does he do it, eh?); you want to know about the time he and I shared a flat with the only cat that could reach thirty miles an hour, especially with Chris behind it; when he was struggling not only with the guitar, under the impression he was the fifth Beatle (nowadays it's well-known he's the fifth member of Status Quo), but with a growing realisation that what he wanted to be was a professional science fiction writer and that there was no, absolutely no, reason in the world why he shouldn't become one. Well, that's too big a story to be told here, but here's one thing I twigged from growing up with Chris: if you want to succeed in SF - work. Chris constantly flatters me by telling me that I'm potentially a better writer than he is. I constantly counter by saying that a writer is a writer when he writes and not much when he doesn't. Chris writes; he doesn't sit around posing and talking about it or dreaming about it, he gets down to it and works bloody hard. He deserves his success.

Here's a second clue: don't compromise your talent and settle for anything less than the best. Chris respects SF too much to hack in it (one of his abiding principles); everything he does in SF is touched by an underlying admiration for the genre.

I haven't so far mentioned Chris Priest the fan. That's how he started his career, of course, and it explains why now he's so clued-up as a writer. He's never really lost his affection for fandom, from his initial fanzine CON, through his editorship of TANGENT, the BSFA's one-time fiction fanzine, to the perhaps-never-to-be-completed sequence of fanzines: YAWL-B, THUD-F and ???-? (answers on a plain postcard to Dave Langford's ANSIBLE). And now of course comes Chris's resurgence with DEADLOSS; if he sticks with it, it could well prove the focal point fanzine of the Eighties, the long-awaited answer to Charles Platt's POINT OF VIEW.

A Dream of Wessex

"A time exciting novel — SF if you want a label, but an enrichment not only of the sub-genre but the whole genre too." C. J. Driver in the Guardian

The Space Machine

"A Scientific Romance
"Altogether this is an astonishing change of pace for Mr Priest, and one which extends his powers in ways which reveal him as one of the best and most persuasive young British writers in the genre." Tom Hutchinson in The Times

Inverted World

"A tight, gripping, suspenseful narrative constantly keeping you guessing... I wouldn't be surprised if Priest hadn't created here a completely new science fiction sub-category."
Maxim Jakubowski in New Scientist

Winner of the British Science Fiction Association Award
Hugo Award nominee

Fugue for a Darkening Island

"A chilling and convincing new novel with a remarkably topical title... Mr Priest's novel is short and stark but his character study is completely credible... A provocative and disturbing allegory that has echoes for us all." Graham Lord in the Sunday Express

Finally I would say this: enjoy Chris Priest at this convention; he's there to be enjoyed. If you're a regular convention-goer, you'll know what an asset to a convention Chris can be. If you're a newcomer I think you'll be impressed by his style, his intelligence and his energy. But remember that he shares that grand old English trait of debunking bunk wherever he finds it and of suffering fools badly - check your credentials before engaging in conversation. And take note: he once told me that what he looks for at a convention is good company, good talk and a good night's sleep. He's GoH this time so I don't think he'll get much of a good night's sleep, but you can certainly count upon him for a bit of the other.

Andrew Stephenson

If Christopher Priest had not existed, back in 1973, I rather suspect that Fate would have invented him, purely to help advance my career. We first met in 1971 when, as the European Representative of the SFWA, he had to distribute the European membership's official publications and generally keep Head Office in line. He later passed that job to me, so I know it called for more than was apparent; that he could handle it without showing too much strain was a tribute to his talent for slogging through thankless work.

Later, in October 1972, we shared the experience of the first British Milford Conference, another tough grind he seemed to relish, to the extent that he has since come back for more and has even coped with a term on the Committee. It was at the first Milford that he detailed what he was currently writing, a novel set in a world with an impossible shape. As a sort of trailer for the novel he submitted for criticism a short story, which excited various degrees of comment, none of it lukewarm. It was apparent that the book would not pass unnoticed; and subsequently it was accepted for publication in the USA by Harper & Row. Meanwhile, Chris had asked whether I'd be interested in providing a few illustrations. I recall feeling immensely flattered. My involvement with professional SF artwork was then only beginning and the prospect of contributing to a book I was sure would be well worth the effort of its creation and publication dazzled me. INDOCTRINAIRE and FUGUE FOR A DARKENING ISLAND had demonstrated that Chris would not be satisfied with orthodoxy; and when, in due course, I was able to read the manuscript of INVERTED WORLD it was apparent that my work had really been cut out for me. We spent quite some time while on the telephone over the following weeks, debating what ought to be depicted. It was an amicable debate, although our interpretations of what Chris had actually meant in this or that part of his novel diverged considerably on occasion. Eventually, however, consensus was reached and the illustrations appeared in print. My first artwork commission had been completed, I think successfully. That it later benefitted me in other ways than the money I have received, I am in no doubt, and I have Chris to thank for having had faith in my potential.

And my case is not unique, for he has frequently shown a willingness to guide others or lend an unobtrusive helping hand. One trusts that Fate will be as ready to invent a few more people, as and when Chris needs them.

Bob Shaw

It is a matter of personal regret to me that I am not in Birmingham this weekend attending the convention - partly because it is the first Novacon I have missed, partly because I have at last mastered the art of driving straight to the hotel in spite of everything the traffic planners can do to prevent me, but mainly because I am missing seeing and hearing Chris Priest in action as Guest of Honour.

It's a tribute he has well and truly earned for his professional writing, for his activity in SF fandom over many years, and simply for being Chris Priest.

Taking the first heading...er...first, it would be superfluous for me to start listing here his books and short stories. You are already familiar with them and with those qualities of imagination, fine writing and sheer commitment to the science fiction genre that characterise his work. Oh, I know he goes around telling people he is principally a writer and that he fails to see why his books have to be categorised in any way, but he doesn't fool me. The man loves science fiction and gives of his best for it, and that's why he has achieved his well-deserved success. I have known Chris for quite a number of years and have seen his hair steadily get shorter and shorter as his professional reputation grows - and I look forward to the day when he sports a shelf full of Hugos and Nebulas and a crew cut.

Next there is all the work, unpaid work, Chris has put into the peripheral regions of the professional science fiction world - things like his excellent critical essays in journals such as FOUNDATION, his continuing support for conventions, his contributions to fanzines, and his recent emergence as a fanzine editor in his own right. All those who were lucky enough to receive the first issue of DEADLOSS agree that its cover illustration set a standard which no arbiter of good taste can afford to ignore. Needless to say, the contents of that and the subsequent issue lived up to the promise of that first cover.

Then there is Chris Priest, the person. I have found him generous, helpful, thoughtful, concerned for his fellow man, but I don't want to go all soppy at a time like this. One of his talents which will affect you most as a member of NOVACON 9 - and one to which I have publicly confessed my envy - is his ability to give very complicated answers to simple questions. This doesn't arise from any deviousness in his nature, although he could be devious if he wanted to, it's just that he thinks a lot about science fiction and related matters, and his thoughts have depth and subtlety.

So if you think you know a thing or two about science fiction and want to spark idea against idea and see if anything catches fire, go over to him, say I sent you, and have a bloody good talk feast. I'm sorry I'm not there to take part in person, but I'm with you in spirit.

Have a good convention!

Rob Holdstock

"How about a frizz?" he cries suddenly, and responding like Pavlov's dogs we rise from amidst the litter of beer cans, cigarette packets, books and coffee cups and troupe out into the hot summer afternoon, sprinting across the perfect English lawn, through the flower gardens and into the cricket field beyond the gate. Years spent crouched over typewriters gives us all the grace of stick insects as we race for the spinning white disc, Priest the most practiced, the most fleet, launching the frisbee a hundred different ways, laughing gleefully as it thuds splinteringly into one set of teeth after another: perhaps Stephenson's, or Evans', or Flynn's or Sheckley's, depending on who could make it for the working afternoon. These few minutes of respiratory anguish are all part of the regular visit to Chris Priest's sprawling, smokey basement flat in Harrow, as much a ritual as the moaning about the American SF market, the uncontrollable mirth at the first paragraph of THE ICE AGE, the planning of anthologies, the smoothing of egos, often ruffled by letters, conversations, readers, the encouragement of those caught in a 'writer's pause' - we deny blocks totally - the quick blast of Status Quo. Chris Priest sits cross-legged below the mantle-piece, on a carpet darkened by the body fluids of spiders crushed to death by the large foot attached to the trembling, screeching form above it; we share his arachnophobia and keep our legs drawn tight to our chests. Intensity, enthusiasm, insight cloak the man like a coat of many colours; he considers deeply, opinions strongly, but listens carefully: passing years age neurones, change the appropriateness of view-points.

After the fling, sweaty, fibrillating, we troupe back into the lounge, reflecting on the pleasures of being writers, rationalising how this apparent idleness is in fact an essential part of earning a living from the written word. The basement flat in Ortygia House is ingrained with Chris Priest, every nook, every book, every shadow. He has lived there a long time. Like the man, the flat is a balanced mixture of fan and writer; like the man, conversation is never static, but jumps from spicy anecdote, to elaborate dissection of contractual clauses, from fannish jokes to discussion of literary influence. The typewriter that produced the elegant novel A DREAM OF WESSEX also produced the scurrilous fanzine DEADLOSS; one wonders if the machine is at all confused? Years ago I bought the electric typewriter on which he had written four drafts of INVERTED WORLD. I swear that for a year it tried to write a fifth upon its own.

Since the fondly remembered days of Compact Books, SCIENCE FANTASY, and his first story "The Run", Chris Priest has aged a thousand miles, travelled a thousand years. I am not envious of his writing, nor his talent: I find both to be a pleasure and a stimulus, not to be copied but to be enjoyed and admired, not to be compared, but to allow one a closer regard of the man behind the images. For Chris Priest is that rare phenomenon among writers in the field of speculative and futuristic fiction - he is a man who is his writing, whose life blood flows through the cells and tissues of his prose.

I have known him a long time. I am delighted to see him honoured at a British Convention at last.

As mentioned by Andrew Stephenson in his piece on Chris Priest (see page 7) a set of illustrations were executed for the US Harper & Row edition, which differed from those used in the New English Library paperback edition. Few people will have had the opportunity to see that American edition so we thought that this programme book seemed a good place to publish these illustrations for their first UK appearance. In addition, we are publishing one illustration that has previously only appeared in the critical magazine FOUNDATION.

THE CHAIRMAN'S BIT

Rog Peyton

At the end of 1978, after having been on either the main Brum Group committee or a NOVACON committee every year since 1971, I thought I'd have a rest this year. Then it was discovered that no committee was forthcoming to organise NOVACON 9 - was this the end of NOVACONS? Well, I thought (in my masochistic way), why not? Organising this year's NOVACON would be a cinch. In fact, the easiest job on the main committee! Due to SEACON being only two months before, NOVACON 9 would be a relatively small affair...a good committee could get it organised in no time at all. Hah! How I wished I'd got that time machine up there!

Somewhere along the line, we lost our way. In no time at all we were way behind schedule..."Leave it till after SEACON - there'll be plenty of time." seemed to be the committee catchphrase. As it has turned out there was little time at all after SEACON - NOVACON 9 looms very large as I write this. Fortunately, that good committee I mentioned, turned out to be a very good committee and almost overnight all our talks, plans, thoughts, preparations, etc., turned into a fully organised programme. It's thanks to that committee that there is a NOVACON again this year - there they are on the back cover of this programme...Chris Morgan (top left), Paul Oldroyd (top centre), Stan Eling (top right), Pauline Morgan (bottom left), Helen Eling (Bottom right) plus yours truly (bottom centre).

Our Guest of Honour is also on the back page - centre. Chris Priest must take much of the blame for NOVACON 9 being much bigger than we originally planned. If he wasn't such a popular and such a good writer many of you would have stayed at home. Our thanks to Chris for being an excellent GoH.

My thanks to those people who have contributed to this programme book - Andrew, Graham, Rob and Bob (serves you right - if you will be GoH at another Con, you must expect to miss this one!) for their pieces on Chris, Andrew (again!) for permission to use the INVERTED WORLD illustrations, and to Dave Hardy, our own Brum Group Chairman, who at very short notice supplied the title illustrations throughout this book and did all the necessary staining, vignetting and what-have-you to get the effect I wanted on the cover (I just hope the printers do their bit right).

Thanks to that master of award design & construction, Ray Bradbury for once again designing and making the NOVA Award and to Ye Gerbish who knows how cine projectors work. Thanks to everyone who has contributed to this convention.

Enjoy the con. If you don't, you've only yourself to blame.

NOVACON 9

Organised by the Birmingham Science Fiction Group

2nd-3rd-4th November 1979

Royal Angus Hotel, Birmingham

PROGRAMME

ALL CONVENTION PROGRAMME ITEMS WILL BE HELD IN THE CON HALL - THE WROXTON SUITE.

FRIDAY

- 3.30pm The Convention Chairman Rog Peyton will open the convention by introducing our Guest of Honour Christopher Priest plus other famous names for the benefit of newcomers.
- 3.45pm Film: A MATTER OF LIFE AND DEATH. A British film from 1946 directed by Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger. It stars David Niven and is a fantasy film telling how, in the mind of a man undergoing a critical brain operation, a court trial takes place. Fantasy sections are in colour - the rest in black and white.
- 5.30pm "Where Have All the Aliens Gone?" - a talk by Gerry Webb suitably illustrated with slides.
- 6.30pm Dinner break.
- 8.30pm Science Fiction "University Challenge". First of the eliminating rounds - teams are the Surrey Limpwrist vs The Brummies. Quizmaster: Chris Morgan.
- 9.30pm The NOVACON Chat Show. An informal and relaxed programme item in which our hostess, the blonde and beautiful Eve Harvey chats to three members of the convention.
- 10.30pm Film: DOC SAVAGE: THE MAN OF BRONZE. The Michael Anderson/George Pal movie of the invincible superhero, made in 1975. Stars Ron Ely in the title role. (Running time: 1hr 40min)

SATURDAY

- 10.00am Science Fiction "University Challenge". Second eliminating round. Teams are Scotland vs Cambridge University. Quizmaster: Chris Morgan.
- 10.45am Tea/Coffee break.
- 11.00am "The Science Fiction Boom...and the Aftermath" - a panel discussion chaired by Ken Bulmer. The panellists are Mike Dickinson, Ken Slater and Andrew Stephenson.
- 12.00 Book Auction Part 1. Auctioneers: Chris Morgan & Rog Peyton.
- 1.00pm Lunch break.
- 2.30pm "Meetings with Remarkable Men" - a talk by our Guest of Honour Chris Priest, followed by a chance to ask Chris questions on any subject.
- 3.15pm "This House believes that characterisation is not necessary for good SF." A debate under formal debating rules. Speaking for the motion will be Ian Watson and Dave Langford. Speaking against the motion will be Pam Bulmer and Pete Weston. In the chair will be Tim Stannard.
- 4.15pm Tea/Coffee break.
- 4.30pm Short Films: (1) INCIDENT AT OWL CREEK BRIDGE - 1961 French film based on story by Ambrose Bierce.
(2) THE ASIMOV INTERVIEW. First showing in UK of a film made in August this year by the BBC (Not yet shown on TV!)

- 7.00pm Dinner break.
- 10.00pm The Fancy Dress Parade. Your host: Martin Hoare.
Followed by THE DISCO - dancing to all types of music to the early hours.
Your Dj this year: Geoff Kemp.

SUNDAY

10.30am Science Fiction "University Challenge" - Grand Final.

11.30am Tea/Coffee break.

11.45am Open Forum - the Future of NOVACONS. This is your chance to air your views on how NOVACON should be run in the future - bigger and bigger each year or smaller affairs in line with the original intentions of NOVACON? If we have smaller NOVACONS how do we stop people registering?

12.30pm Lunch break.

2.00pm Art Auction. Auctioneer: Rog Peyton.

2.45pm (approx) A Selection of short films. Details not known at time of going to print.

4.30pm (approx) END OF CONVENTION.
