Good Evening

Welcome to the 2014 Hugo Awards Ceremony, being held as part of the 72nd World Science Fiction Convention, Loncon 3, in London at the ExCeL Exhibition Center.

Although the stage tonight has a very British feel (well, London at least), this ceremony celebrates the worldwide appeal of science fiction. Presenting awards tonight, there are guests from Britain and America, but also Nigeria, China, Canada, and even Australia – just to mention a few of the countries as the members of this convention come from all over the globe – and our list of nominees hail from around the world too.

However, it is not just the geographical diversity of our field that we celebrate tonight – it's the diversity within fandom. Although you might not like the styles of all of the nominated works and you might not choose to read all the myriad sub-genres that exist within speculative fiction, tonight they have their place as Hugo Award nominees, chosen by the community of fans.

As Ray Bradbury put it, “Anything you dream is fiction, and anything you accomplish is science. The whole history of mankind is nothing but science fiction”, so it's only natural that a World Science Fiction Convention should be a place for bringing people together to celebrate the accomplishments of our entire genre.

We hope you enjoy the evening.

Hugo Award Trophies

Hugo Award trophies vary from year to year, but all (save 1958's awards) feature one prominent element: the finned Hugo rocket which stands atop the trophy.

The earliest Hugo Award trophy used a rocket designed by Jack McKnight and Ben Jason based upon the hood ornament from a 1950s American automobile; however, the shape of the rocket changed over the years as individual committees reinterpreted the design. The current design of the trophy rocket, which is now considered definitive, has been the same since Peter Weston's refinement of the design debuted in 1984. Since then, every Hugo Award trophy rocket (except those used in 1991) has been literally cast from the same mould.

Each Worldcon committee designs a base for the trophy. Some have been fairly plain; others have moved toward the fanciful and whimsical. The 1992 Hugo Award, presented by MagiCon, included pieces of an actual gantry from NASA's Kennedy Space Center, while the 1994 Hugo Award, presented by ConAdian, contained pieces of "space metal" — fragments of Canadian sounding rockets that had actually been in space. This page shows a few of the more fanciful designs from recent Worldcons.

Like many recent Worldcons, Loncon 3 ran a design competition to determine the base to be used for their Hugo Award trophy. The winning design was submitted by Joy Alyssa Day. This is Ms Day's first Hugo base design.

The Hugo Awards

The Hugo Awards, presented annually since 1955, are science fiction's most prestigious award. The Hugo Awards are voted on by members of the World Science Fiction Convention (also known as "the Worldcon"), which is also responsible for administering them.

The Hugo Awards are trademarked by the World Science Fiction Society ("WSFS"), an unincorporated literary society which sponsors the Worldcon and the Hugo Awards. A full list of all previous Hugo Award winners with statistics is available from the official Hugo Awards website at www.thehugoawards.org

The John W. Campbell Award

The John W. Campbell Award is given to the best new science fiction or fantasy writer whose first work of science fiction or fantasy was published in a professional publication in the previous two years. For the 2014 award, the qualifying work must have been published in 2012 or 2013.

The John W. Campbell Award for Best New Writer is currently administered by WSFS and the results are announced at the Hugo Awards ceremony. However, this award is sponsored by Dell Magazines, not by WSFS, and is not actually a Hugo Award.
